

When training, we always advise to use small treats.

But what if your dog has allergies that make it difficult to find small treats? Or you only want to work with your dog's own kibble while training, but your dog's kibble is large and not breakable into smaller pieces?

Here is an easy way to make Kibble trainers yourself.

You will need:

- Blender
- Kibble
- Water
- Pyramid pan (silicone baking mat) or heat resistant ice cube mold

Recipe:

- Preheat the oven to 400 degrees Fahrenheit.
- Grind 2 cups of your dog's kibble in the blender to a fine powder.
- Pour the powder into a bowl and add about 1.5 cups of water while stirring until you get a nice spreadable dough.
- Spread the dough in the molds with a knife.
- Place the filled molds in the oven and leave them in the oven for about 20 to 30 minutes with the door ajar.
- Take them out of the oven and let them cool in the mold and voilà your homemade kibble trainers are ready.

Pay attention! Do not use these kibble trainers as a full meal for your dog. Due to the heating process, there is a chance that the nutritional value of the kibble will change, so that they may no longer contain all the necessary nutrients. The advice is therefore to never replace more than 10% of your dog's meal with these homemade trainers.
